Ripple – the World’s First Wearable Support Network – Announces Global Launch on HSN

Device will be featured tonight as part of HSN’s Innovation Event

NEW YORK and FT. LAUDERDALE—September 23, 2017—Ripple Network Technologies, Inc., today announced the global launch of its revolutionary personal safety service and device on entertainment and lifestyle retailer, HSN, an operating segment of HSN, Inc. (NYSE: HSNI). Ripple will be featured during HSN’s Innovation Event, hosted by Julie Truster, tonight, September 23, starting at 11p.m. (ET).

“We are extremely thrilled to partner with HSN to officially launch Ripple as part of HSN’s Innovation Event,” said Ripple CEO Tim O’Neil. “This launch marks an exciting milestone in our plans to bring Ripple’s first-of-its-kind approach to living safely and confidently, to a worldwide audience.”

Ripple is not another panic button safety device. It is personal safety for the modern world – solving both emergencies and uncomfortable situations. Unlike all other personal safety devices on the market, Ripple is a tiny (size of a dime), discreet button linked to the user’s smartphone, which can be accessed without anyone noticing. The device connects users to a live, personal backup team so, instead of calling for help, the help calls you.

Trained Ripple professionals handle alerts 24/7. Click the wearable device, and the user will immediately receive a call from the Ripple monitoring team to his or her smartphone. They know who and where the user is, and have resources to immediately dispatch emergency services if the user needs it. If a user requires emergency help, but can’t talk on the phone, he or she can click three times and the monitoring team will send first responders directly to their location.
